Essex County, the pivotal centre in the suffrage battle in New Jersey, overwhelmingly defeated the women who wanted the rule, according to the bulk of the returns received last night at the headquarters of the Women's Political Union in Newark, which also kept in touch with various parts of the state. The majority opinion it was held.

Mild success in some of the smaller municipalities, particularly in Passaic and Bergen counties, were the only rays of hope to keep the nerve-racked and worn-out suffragists up to hear the results. Before midnight Miss Mina C. Van Winkle, president of the Women's Political Union, announced victory for the opposition, had declared in no uncertain terms that it should not be read as a triumph for the antisuffragists, as asserted that it was only the strength and evil influences of political bosses and the liquor ring that made the defeat possible.

The state return from the suffragist workers were read aloud in the basement of the Halsey Street Methodist Episcopal Church, next door to the Union's headquarters. In the West Building, in Halsey Street, about a block away, the antis, with Mrs. E. Yarde Breese, of Plainfield, president of the New Jersey Association Opposed to Woman Suffrage, were gathered.

The results, received at both places, contrary to the previous experience in elections, were similar, and indicated that the state would turn down the suffragists by a majority of more than 60,000 votes.

As expected in the voting precincts throughout the state, where either of the dominant political machines or the liquor interests were known to wield an influence, the vote against the amendment was heavy.

There were glaring indications that the personal campaign of James R. Nugent, the Essex County Democratic head, had its effect. On the face of the defeat, Mrs. Van Winkle and other suffrage leaders maintained a philosophical attitude about the results. They declared the voting showed they had much greater strength than the antis were willing to admit before the polls opened.

"This must not be regarded as a victory for the antisuffragists as an organization," said Miss Van Winkle. "So much as a political victory for the corrupt political influences which they have permitted to hide behind them. Although we have lost at the polls, the Women's Political Union of New Jersey will continue to exist. We purpose first of all to aid our sisters in the other campaigns to come, whom we see a deep debt of gratitude to us. We will enter the race to have the United States Constitution amended so as to give the Federal franchise to the women. We will go to the New Jersey Legislature with bills in the interest of women and children, and place behind them the influence of the women in the coming session."

Miss Breese, surrounded by her co-workers, was like a child with a new

Of all general publications, the magazines for women are most dynamic. Their primary purpose is the improvement of methods—including housekeeping, cooking, care of children and dress.

Thus, while a magazine of entertainment fulfills its mission if it gives you a pleasant hour, a magazine like The Designer to be successful at all induces concrete activity in some department of domestic economy, and this activity must include the purchase of necessary articles.

Thus, just as a Philadelphia woman goes to Strawbridge & Clothier for patterns and dry goods with which to make a dress which she has seen in The Designer, in the same manner she will go to Thomas Martindale or some other grocer for the ingredients of a new recipe.

And so it is that without editorial collusion such a magazine as The Designer performs its very mission fits the purposes of the advertiser. More than 350,000 copies each month.

brewers, too. During the afternoon it looked bad for the antis, so much so that one representative of the brewers made this admission, confidentially, of course.

"We thought a couple of weeks ago that suffrage would be beaten, or three to one, during the last couple of days, our people have not felt so sure of their ground, and some of them have been urging greater activity in the fight. However, we are still confident that the proposed amendment will be beaten."

In more than one of the big counties the politicians "jolted" the women by saying they were going to vote for the amendment without the least intention of doing so. The reason for this is that the returns when completed would turn the tide. But the final tally, as it turned out, was in favor of the suffragists.

The most strenuous of all the bosses fighting against the amendment was, of course, in Newark, where Jim Nugent controls things in the Democratic camp with an iron hand. Nugent at times had tears in his eyes as he worked and spoke against giving women the right to vote.
